When choosing the right size of an outdoor louvered blade aluminium motorized pergola based on the available space, follow these steps:

1. Measure the Space: Use a tape measure to accurately determine the length, width, and height of the area where you plan to install the pergola. For example, if you have a rectangular patio that is 15 feet long and 10 feet wide, you'll have a starting point for your size considerations.
2. Consider Proportions: Aim for a pergola size that maintains a balanced and aesthetically pleasing proportion within the space. A pergola that is too large might overwhelm the area, while one that is too small could look insignificant. If your space is relatively small, like a 10x10 feet balcony, a 8x8 feet pergola might be appropriate.
3. Allow for Circulation: Ensure there is enough room around the pergola for easy movement. You should be able to walk freely without feeling cramped. For instance, if you have a 20x15 feet garden, leaving at least 2-3 feet of clearance on all sides of a 15x10 feet pergola would be ideal.
4. Account for Furniture and Accessories: If you plan to place furniture like a dining table and chairs or a lounge set under the pergola, measure the dimensions of these items and add that space to your calculation. Say you have a 6-person dining table that is 7 feet long and 4 feet wide, you'd need to factor in at least that much space within the pergola.
5. Vertical Clearance: Don't forget about the height. Make sure the pergola has enough height to accommodate the tallest person who will use the space comfortably and to avoid a claustrophobic feel. A standard height of around 8 feet is common, but if you have higher ceilings or need more headroom, you might go for 9 or 10 feet.

Let's say you have a 12x18 feet backyard area and you want to create a cozy seating area with a small sofa and coffee table. A pergola sized around 10x12 feet would likely fit well, leaving enough space for movement and giving a proportionate look to the overall space.

Taking these factors into account will help you select a pergola size that fits perfectly within your available outdoor space.
